

ENCHANT THE DRAGON!

Landmarks of Leeds

Leeds Town Hall was designed by young architect Cuthbert Brodrick, his other notable Leeds landmarks include the Corn Exchange. Building began on August 17, 1853, with a final cost of around £125,000. The distinctive, Baroque-style clock tower was a later addition to the plans in 1856, made to enhance the building's grandeur. It was officially opened by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert on September 7, 1858, vast crowds lined the streets. The stone lions are said to come to life and roam the city's streets if the Town Hall clock ever strikes thirteen or they may come to life at Midnight on New Year's Eve and stand up to roar.

The Dark Arches were built in the 1860s using over 18 million bricks to support Leeds Railway Station over the River Aire. Historically, they were used for industrial storage of materials and were a known haunt for thieves and due to their historical pitch-darkness and seclusion, the arches have long been associated with crime and paranormal activity. There is also a rumour that they are the entrance to a maze of huge underground tunnels.

City Varieties Music Hall dates back to the 1860s, this historic music hall is home to several spirits including the "Lavender Lady," who is said to sit in the balcony and leave a distinctive floral scent. Other reports include the sightings of a man in World War I-era clothes and a mysterious waiter who disappears through a spot where a door once was.
